VOL. VII. M'KINNEY, TEXAS, THURSDAY, JULY 3, 1890. NO. 22.

DR. GEO. WILKINS,

THE DENTIST,

Who captured the first premium on artificial teeth, and everything else pertaining to dentistry at the Texas State Fair and Dallas Exposition, 1888, has put in more than

3,000 Sets of Teeth

Put in the first year office was opened. I will continue to put in artificial teeth for

$6.00 A SET GOLD FILLING $1.00,

Call and see new method teeth without plates, that will not drop nor get loose, nor injure the remaining teeth, or make the mouth sore. See samples of Continuous Gum Teeth, Gold Plates, Gold Crowns and Porcelain Fillings. Emeral Crowns made to match your own teeth. Porcelain teeth carved for deform jaws, a specialty.

Gold and Porcelain Crowns $2.50 to $5.00.

I have on hand from ten to fifteen thousand dollars worth of dental goods, embracing the finest collection of artificial teeth in the United States, including all the best makes of both American and foreign manufacturers.

Do not be deceived or misled by the statements of the old fossilized and sore-headed dentists, whose methods of practice have long since gone out of date, and who are opposed to the progress and advancement of dental science; but call and see the facilities of my dental establishment for producing strictly first-class work, unsurpassed by any dental office in America. My establishment is conducted on strictly business principles, independent of any clique or combination or code-of-ethics influence.

BITTEN BY A MADDOG.

A Little Girl Fearfully Lacerated by a Rabid Dog.

The Misstep of a Passenger on the Central May Result Seriously.

The Unloaded Shotgun Gets in Its Deadly Work at San Antonio.

MARSHALL, Tex., July 2.—Rosa, the 12-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Taylor, was bitten by a maddog in a neighbor's yard. Her clothes were torn into strips and her right groin was badly lacerated. She is resting well at this writing.

Sad and Sorrowful.

GROVETON, Tex., June 28.—A few months ago Prof. D. A. Davis, of Booneville, N. C., arrived here and at once took charge of the Groveton school. He came highly recommended and soon won the friendship of the people. The mothers of innocent girls unhesitatingly and unsuspectingly permitted him to visit their homes. Among his many female acquaintances was Miss Annie, the daughter of Judge J. B. Turner. She had just begun to bud into womanhood. Wednesday night the sound of a pistol shot was heard in the home of Judge Turner. The father, rushing in the room, discovered the limp and lifeless form of his daughter. She had committed suicide. The pistol that had sent her soul to the future lay smoking by her side. Her face was bespattered and besmeared with the brains that a few weeks before had scarcely entertained the thought of sin. A great stream of blood flowed from her breathless body. The man who was responsible for the crime he knew to be Davis. Snatching the pistol from her helpless hands, and wrought into infuriated and uncontrollable madness, he rushed to the boarding house of Davis. As soon as he discovered him and without warning he began emptying at him the remaining chambers of the pistol that had just a few moments before ended a life that was so dear to him. Four shots, each unerring in its aim, found lodgment in the body of the professor. He died instantly.

Muffled in Mystery.

HOUSTON, Tex., July 1.—A dark and mysterious killing occurred in the outer part of the fifth ward late Saturday night, which no one has been able to understand or explain. An old colored man named Spellman, 60 years or more of age, while sleeping, it is presumed, was shot and instantly killed. The assasnation occurred just beyond Jonndeville, a part of the fifth ward, and the shots fired were heard about 11 o'clock at night. The old man had been chopping wood and burning coal in that locality for some time, and taking advantage of the pleasant weather, had been sleeping upon a quilt spread upon the ground beneath a small bush arbor and for several weeks he had enjoyed life in that way. Sunday a man named Stewart, accompanied by another man, was walking in the locality, and seeing the old man still lying under the quilt, he approached to awaken him, but upon raising the cover discovered that he was dead. Examination showed that he had been shot four times, one ball entering the head and the other three the body.

What Wrath Wrought.

GALVESTON, Tex., June 30.—Deputy Sheriff Patton of Brazos county gives a correct statement of the killing of William Holt by Jack Huey. He says Holt had married Huey's sister, and on account of bad feeling between the men, Huey had been charged or suspected of trying to get his sister to leave her husband. On the day above mentioned Huey was riding by Holt's place, and made some inquiry after Mrs. Holt, his sister. Her husband told him he need not trouble himself about her and to ride on. Huey then remarked that as there had been trouble between them it had better be settled on the spot, and with that raised his Winchester and shot Holt through the body, breaking his arm, through which the bullet passed before entering the body. Mrs. Holt came out of the house and assisted her husband into bed, where laid her child. Huey followed them inside and placing his rifle against Holt's head, blew out his brains. Huey made his escape and Sheriff Sweeney is now offering $25 for his arrest.

Two Children Burned.

CLARKSVILLE, Tex., June 25.—Monday evening the 12-year-old daughter and 8-year-old son of James Young, an industrious white farmer residing six miles east of this city, were burned to death. They took a coal oil can to the field to build a fire for the purpose of roasting some onions. The oil can was placed too near the fire and exploded with the above result. A babe in company with the unfortunate victims was badly burned, but it is thought it will recover.

Drowned in a Spring.

KAUFMAN, Tex., June 26.—A young woman about 19 years of age, named Mary C. Lewis, living about three miles from this place, was drowned in a spring Wednesday. She had gone to the spring after water and while resting close by was seized with an epileptic fit and fell into the spring, which was about two feet deep. A little girl with her gave the alarm but before help came Miss Lewis was dead.

The Unloaded Gun.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., July 2.—The unloaded gun got in its work again yesterday. A 12-year-old boy fooling with a shotgun accidentally discharged the weapon, sending a heavy charge of No. 8 bird shot into the face and hands of Annie Sanders, his sister. The shot tore a finger off her left hand and literally peppered her face, causing serious wounds.

Colored Baseball Contest.

FORT WORTH, Tex., June 30.—In the game of baseball to-day between the colored clubs of Dallas and Fort Worth it required two policemen to protect the umpire's life from the storms of both clubs.

New and Attractive Features of the Texas State Fair.

DALLAS, Tex., June 25.—The State Fair and Dallas Exposition association will have out one of the most attractive race programmes for the fall races that has ever been put out in the state. The purses will be larger than were ever before offered in Texas. In addition to the regular programme, which covers an amount equal to that offered previous years, the association will make up two large purses of at least $3000 each. One of these will be offered in running races and one in trotting. The running race will be made a Texas derby, to be given on opening day, and it will be the first derby race ever given in Texas. The handsome purses cannot fail to attract to the fair the finest flyers in the country, and lovers of the sport may be assured of a first-class entertainment in every particular. Many celebrated horses will be on the track. To add to the comfort of those attending the races the seats in the grand stand are being provided with backs and cushions. Everything conducive to the comfort and pleasure of visitors to the track will be provided.

The association has engaged in the management of the race department judges and starters of national reputation, and it is intended this year to throw every safeguard about to secure perfect harmony.

At the last meeting of the directors they authorized the erection of a grand stand and music hall on the fair grounds.

A delegation headed by Gov. Ross and embracing many of the leading men of the state invited Grover Cleveland and his wife to attend the industrial exhibition in Dallas, and they accepted the invitation with delight.

Case of Self-Murder.

HOUSTON, Tex., June 27.—A deliberate and remarkable determination to die was shown by Wm. Grimes, an Englishman, who was drowned in Buffalo bayou Thursday afternoon. He was last seen alive about 2 o'clock Thursday morning and he was noticed standing under an electric light near John Lyon's boarding-house in the fifth ward. He had been stopping at Mr. Lyons boarding house, and yesterday morning when the servant went into his room there was no one there, but upon examining the surroundings she found a note lying upon the table. It contained these words: "My body will be found near the International and Great Northern railroad bridge in the bayou." The information was conveyed to the police, who went down to the bayou and inquired of the bride watchman, who had not seen the man but had noticed a hat and pair of shoes on the bank of the bayou near the water's edge. Glancing along the water's edge one of them noticed a small rope and twine tied about a post, and it was suggested that it might be a clew, and they attempted to draw it out, but found a heavy body attached to the other end. It proved to be that of the missing man, who had tied a towel about his neck, the string around his arm above the elbow and pulled it through the towel. He was about 42 years old.

Angry Mob Repulsed.

NAVASOTA, Tex., June 26.—A mob of about forty determined men from the upper part of the county went to the jail in Anderson and demanded of the sheriff the negro, Brown, who committed assault, as reported. The sheriff refused to deliver the prisoner, whereupon the mob warned him to remove his family from the jail building, which he wanted to do, but the sheriff's wife refused to leave. The mob, although furiously angry, dispersed, being loth to do anything whereby as brave a lady as Mrs. Scott might be hurt. The negro brute can thank her that his spinal column is whole, as the deed was most infernal. The negro is alleged to have broken open the door of a young lady's room with an iron bar and to have beaten her into insensibility with a smoothing-iron. A party of men that nothing would deter intended going to Anderson last night to hang the negro, but the sheriff found it outand left for Houston on the 3 p. m. train with the prisoner before any one here knew of it.

Fatal Misstep.

HEMPSTEAD, Tex., July 2.—Passengers on this morning's train from Austin reported that an accident had happened to a passenger named Brooks yesterday evening, who jumped on the moving train after the conductor had given a signal to the engineer to go ahead. The passenger rushed forward after the train started and made a misstep and the wheels ran over a part of one foot, crushing all but the large toe. The company's surgeon, Dr. Lockett, was telegraphed for and promptly responded. The doctor urged the man to remain in his bedroom and have the wound attended to. This he refused to do and insisted on going on to Giddings. He bled profusely all the way up. He is an elderly man and his case is said to be quite serious and requires amputation of the leg to save his life.

Fatal Leg Amputation.

HOUSTON, Tex., July 1.—The amputation of one of the legs of Mr. E. L. Bremond, resulting from the cutting of a corn, caused his death. He was a son of the late Paul Bremond, who built the Houston East and West Texas railway. He had been here about a month, when he was taken down for the the cause stated above. He died yesterday, and the remains were laid to rest in Glenwood

Badly Burned.

CORSICANA, Tex., July 1.—The premises near this city known as the Tom Walton place were yesterday afternoon destroyed by fire. Everything in the house was destroyed, and three persons, viz: Mrs. B. Sykes, occupant, Mrs. Joe Lee and a child, were so terribly charred and schorched that their lives at this writing are despaired of.

Fatal Runaway.

REILY SPRINGS, Tex., June 28.—Dred Owens, while hauling oats with a pair of young mules, struck a stump, throwing some oats on the mules. They became frightened, made a few surges, struck a tree, throwing Mr. Owens against the tree his left cheek striking the tree, throwing him back under the wagon. He lived about half an hour.

Killed by a Mule.

MCGREGOR, Tex., June 27.—A young man by the name of Ament, who resided with his brother eight miles west of here, was riding to the field yesterday morning on a mule with plow gear on. The mule became frightened and threw him, and he got entangled in the gear, so that the mule in running and kicking killed him.

It appears that on one occasion her husband expressed a wish that she would hold her tongue, as the sound of her voice was hateful to him, and she at once replied that she would never speak again. From that day until her death her lips were sealed.

Mrs. Annie Roush of Letart, O., was born at Morgantown, Pa., June 4, 1787, and has lived in Meigs county since 1801. She is in good health, and from appearances she will live several years yet. More remarkable than her great age is the fact that she is at the head of fully 2000 living descendants, which, it is believed, no other person in the world can successfully claim. She can look down on six generations.

"We, the people, are American sovereigns."

Support us, the powers that be—railroad monopoly.

No kicking over the party traces—Demagogues.

Red River county gained a victory in instructing for Hogg.

We are pleased to observe the increasing strength of Gen. Hogg.

Since our last issue the Hogg ranks have been filling up rapidly.

Now, how do the Cook organs feel? Tra-la-la-la le-e! Oh, tra-la-la-la-la-le-e!

The delegates will go to the state convention with the cry "Remember the Alamo."

The bugs under the chips have developed into elephants. They can't be hid, bless you.

Why do some men oppose the amendment and yet favor the commission? Strange, isn't it?

O, where, O, where is our leader Cook? O, where in Texas can he be, with his hopes cut long and his votes cut short O, where in the campaign is he?

Gov. Wheeler carried his own county. Now, if Cook can carry his county, he will then be even with Wheeler. One and one is two.

Those who would make political capital by blasting the character of men will find they are expert at dealing in boomerangs.—Ft. Worth Gazette.

The anti-commission advocates are experts in getting clues, but what is distressing them so badly is, the things won't stick.

Other politicians might take a lesson from Hogg's career, and go and do likewise, i. e. do their duty to the people faithfully.

One of the encroaching enemies of the farmers is the Guinea or Johnson grass, which is giving a number of farmers trouble. Every effort should be made to eradicate this ruinous grass from the entire soil of the great state of Texas.

If the amendment is defeated the railroad allies will then have an easier fight in trying to defeat the commission. Therefore, let every voter cast his ballot for the amendment.

Neither has he any prospect of being the next governor of Texas.

Do all the people that have been endorsing Hogg and a commission know that they are nothing more than a a rabble of communists and disorganizers? If they don't know it a certain Dallas newspaper will enlighten them on that subject.—Gazette.

No! we didn't know it. Is that it so, that Hogg men are a set of communists? Who said so? A certain Dallas paper! Well, then, we know we aren't.

Glorious Fourth.

The wheels of time have rolled on until once more the glorious Fourth is upon us. This is an annual period in America when patriotic feelings well up in the hearts of the people; when the orator steps forth upon the rostrum and repeats in eloquent words the oft-told events of former days; when the the heroes of the revolution are paraded, in beautiful word-painting, before the minds of America's enthused sons; when huzzahs for Washington; huzzahs for Patrick Henry and an army of other heroes and statesmen of 1776; when the press of the country seizes its pen and in marvelous beauty revert to the days of valor and renown. The same stories are repeated each Fourth; the same eulogies; the same exaltation of master spirits who fought and bled and even died for the victory of freedom. Therefore, let the day (to-morrow) be one of en raporte, and whatever is done or said in commemoration of America's birthday let it be of that character which becometh the guardians of freedom, vouchsafed to us by the noble endeavors of those grand characters we love to cherish and honor.

We cannot properly appreciate the privileges guaranteed to us, if we are ignorant of the history of other nations and people antecedent to the occasion when Patrick Henry, fired with the burning thought of liberty and equal rights, thundered with all the fervor of his heart, "Give me liberty or give me death." If we take a backward flight upon the pages of history and pass down the centuries that have come and gone we find in different periods that civil liberty was unknown and freedom a mockery. We learn of the enslavement of thought, the denial of right of opinion, the domination of greed and absolute power. Political oppression and ecclesiastical tyrranny furnished the instruments of death which were ever ready when needed to remove an independent spirit from earth and hush the voice of Freedom. The fagot was on every hand with its lurid glare, the rack grated upon the ears and tore to disfigured horror those who dare espouse the right and cry out for justice. The clashing swords dangled at the side of servants who were ever ready to execute the edicts of heartless tyrants. It sickens the heart to follow the historical recitals of enslavement of the masses, the denial of their right as men, and dire punishment meted out to them if they even complained.

Thus has the past been until the bold cry was uttered by Patrick Henry, (above quoted) and that cherished and revered instrument, the Declaration of Independence, was drawn up. Then the stars and stripes were unfurled to the breeve, and valiant hearts beating in manly breasts, marched to victory under that ensign of protection to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Hence there are reasons for such love of the American flag as will be exhibited to-morrow, and there is greater reason for protecting those principles gained at such terrible cost of life. Therefore, each sovereign voter should beware lest he unwarily aid the encroaching enemies on his rights. The same spirit of greed, the same love of power which characterized the history of the past has crept into free America, and is even now, with brazon face, contending for the sceptor of power, and should it once be wrenched from the sovereign people, as dire calamities will befall the masses as befell those of other ages of the world. These are not idle tales. They are truth, and as "vigilance is the price of liberty," let the people guard the nation, in the perpetuity of civil and religious liberty and the rejection of class legislation and oligarchal power.

"The gospel of monopoly—'Be subject to the powers that be. They that resist shall receive to themselves the greater damnation.'".

To the party bosses: Your occupation has gone, your cry is a farce, and the people know it.

Try All Things

A tremendous effort is being made to defeat the will of the people regarding railroad regulation through the instrumentality of a commission. It is not denied by those who, for reasons best known to themselves, oppose the adoption of the commission amendment, that the people are clamoring for railroad regulation, yet they have taken upon themselves the task, and assumed the responsibility, of defeating this will, thus practically ignoring the old republican maxim that "the will of the people should rule." In considering this unique political movement it would be well for the people to examine the personnel of its leadership. If it appears that they, or any of them are, by virtue of their calling, interested parties, their argument should be estimated, just as any other marketable commodity, at their real value. If it should appear that such leaders, or any of them, are men who, having sought office, have been repudiated at the polls, this fact may go far towards raising a presumption of unfavorable animus on their part. If any of them have made themselves conspicuous by failure to espouse the cause of the common people, when they had a first rate opportunity to do so, it is fair to presume, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that they are like-minded as heretofore. And, generally, if the whole thing seems, upon inspection, to be an effort of interested parties to prevent railroad regulation, then the people should see to it that those who represent them in nominating conventions, know what they are there for.—Farm and Ranch.

The commission question is one that is as broad and long as the great state of Texas itself and involves questions and interests that a statesman of the profoundest learning and forethought is likely to become puzzled over, but to hear men and papers who know but little about the question assert their opinions so positively about the matter, is a little funny. No one knows positively that it will prove advantageous to the state until it is tried. You may believe, as we do, that a commission judiously selected and clothed with proper powers will work well for the state, but to know it positively is another question until the experiment is tried.—Plano Enquirer.

Bro. Harper certainly has failed to inform himself on the commission question. We recommend to him for his serious investigation, the series of articles (12 in number) published in the DEMOCRAT and the Southern Mercury, from the pen of Tom Brown. They contain sufficient information to enable any editor in Texas to see the urgent necessity of the adoption of the commission, and also to recognize the fact that it is no experiment, as twenty-five states have adopten the commission, and in each instance has proved a blessing to the people without injury to the railroads. No, no; there's nothing funny about it, except it be the fact that you appear to be behind the times. Read up, Brer. Harper.

The Michigan Central railroad company has been brought into the United States court on a criminal charge of secretly cutting rates on 60,000 pounds of oats and 60,000 pounds of corn on November 10, 1889. The regular rate was 20 cents and the cut rate 18.2 cents. The defense was that the railroad company knew nothing about it and could not be punished criminally.

Will the Waco Day, or Col. Hughes, or Mr. Clark, or some other personal liberty apostle take the above as a text and elucidate it to the satisfaction of those who are told by the apostles that there is no difference between an individual and a railroad corporation?—Fort Worth Gazette.

Paris, Tex., June 27.—Trainmen who arrived here this morning on the Frisco state that five Pinkerton detectives got aboard the northbound train at West Fork station, in Washington county, Ark., last night with Tascott, the murderer of Banker Snell. Paternalism as a Scarecrow.

If ever the question does arise, whether the people must accept the paternalism of government or the despotism of a power created by the state, the people will accept governmental paternalism. The government may be controlled, but the opponents of the railway commission amendment tell us that certain all-powerful creatures of the government should not be controlled and cannot be. The people make the government, but Messrs. Cook, Hughes, Clark, Barry, et al. tell us the people have nothing to do with the control of railroads. The government of Texas is what the people of Texas choose to have it, but the government of Texas railroads is what a few men in New York choose to have it. We are hearing much of individualism these piping days of discussion, and about "letting people and their industries alone." This is sound doctrine, but when individualism outside of Texas will not let alone the people of Texas and their industries, it is time the people of Texas, organized as a state, should step in and protect the Texas individual and his industry. There is a deal of interest just now in the individual outside the state and a little less in him and a little more in the individual and his industries in Texas is demanded.

Paternalism is a scarecrow. The people are too stupid to note the difference between a railroad and a bank or a turnpike or a steamboat. The point is too fine for popular distinctions. A railroad commission has not enslaved the people of other states, and it will not enslave the people of Texas.

A piece of greenback money by chance once got pasted on a hog's back and the town boys ran that hog a half day, trying to secure the money. It was amusing to see the boys drive the hog down a lane while one of them would secrete himself behind the corner of the fence, waiting to welt the hog on the spot where the money was glued. This somewhat reminds the writer of the condition of affairs, politically, in Texas. There is a live, vigorous Hogg running for governor, and such men as Cook, Clark, etc., have political sticks and are trying to knock the commission off the Hogg; or worse rather, they are trying to kill (politically) the Hogg. But, like the boys after the hog, they'll fail to cut'er.

It is rather funny, strange, a little exciting, somewhat disgusting and perfectly contemptable to see how hard some of the hireling campaign speakers try to tarnish the fair reputation of Gen. Hogg by deftly insinuating into the minds of their hearers misrepresentations of his position, seemingly relying upon their expert use of poison to the mind of their hearers for carrying their point. Oh, shame! where is thy blush?—McKinney Gazette.

Paris Pickings.

PARIS, TEX., June 28, 1890.

Editor Democrat:

Balls, picnics, military drills, base ball games, fights, shows, and excursions are among the items on the daily programme of Paris. Every day brings its usual number of men charged with introducing "the juice of the forbidden fruit into the garden of Eden." Our boarding houses are chuck full and our hotels are doing a fine business. The greedy politicians are out now airing their pet themes. The offender of justice seeketh some one to go on his bond. The merchant runneth after his monthly debtor, and the gas and electric men are letting their lights so shine that others seeing their good works may be constrained to—pay for the last month's supply. The pesky book agent is abroad in the land, and the school teacher is rubbing up his dull recollection with a view to the forth coming examination. Every body is on the qui vive. Old sol sending his perpendicular rays down on the people creates a demand for light goods, straw hats, fans, ice cream, lemonade, and for an increased facility in the ice factories. The doctors smile when they hear that the fruit and melon crops will be in abundance. Look not upon the melon when it is green nor upon the fruit when it turneth, for at last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. The 'Frisco and Santa Fe railroads have been united by a recent purchase practically uniting the North and South. This transaction will give to all points in the south greater facilities for shipping purposes, and a straight line from here to the various cities of the North and East. Real estate transfers are taking place daily here. Farms in the suburbs are being laid off in lots, and some fine residences are now being erected. Northern people and capital are having a great influence here, adding greatly to the wealth of Paris. Education receives due attention. The Aiken university is situated here. This, with a full corps of efficient teachers, a good curriculum and strict discipline make it an honor to Paris, and the cause. These people real ize the fact that "education is wealth." Africa is well represented here. There are positively more negroes here than "Carter had oats." We have them here in all shapes, sizes and classes from the bare-headed boot-black, to the curly-headed politician. They have churches, schools, and some of them have good dwellings, and last they have a brass band. Here the clerical sons of Ham preach morality and religion to the erring ones of the same color and persuasion, and they rejoice in the freedom of life and liberty, given to them by "Uncle Abe." Among the leading dry good houses here may be mentioned that of the Paris Dry Goods Co., carrying on their stock an insurance of $125,000. This is one of the most enterprising firms in North Texas.

Paris enjoys the luxury of a street sprinkler, which being run daily prevents the streets from being dusty making them cool and pleasant. This like all other cities has its full quoto of saloons, dealing out death and destruction to its daily customers, robbing the children of food, clothes and education. God deliver the cities from the curse of saloons.

The city park, situated one mile from the heart of the city is a nice place, beautiful trees, good water, nice swings, croquet grounds, and a dancing hall, are among the principal objects of interest—and amusement. This park is the terminus of the street car line. The Paris canning factory is in full blast now, putting up the various crops of farm and garden and preparing to supply a waiting people with the luxuries of life. Paris has three banks with about $500,000 paid up capital and an authorized stock of nearly a million dollars, all doing a good business. This city supports two daily papers, one issued in the morning and the other in the evening, both enjoying a large circulation. These with the edition of several weekly papers, give to the people of the metropolitan city, plenty of home literature. A visit to the suburban homes in our city will convince any one that these people enjoy peace, pleasure and prosperity. Nice dwellings surrounded with ornamental trees, shrubs and flowers, nice walks, good water and various other conveniences and luxuries too numerous to mention, make this a very pleasant place.

The federal court is still grinding away on the Cross case, and it will probably take two week yet to finish. There are more witnessed in this case than any other ever tried in Paris. The best legal talent to be had has been secured on both sides. It is a well know fact that the way of the transgressor is hard.

ARKANSAW TRAVELER.

"A commission is undemocratic!" exclaims a small chorus of antis. Of course it is, if it be the merauding, wrecking, property-destroying institution that you say it is. You need only to prove the latter proposition, and the former will be admitted. Now for the proof. Out with it. Let us have it, or if not, the people will know how to size you up, you and your cry of "wolf."—Ft. Worth Gazette.

A carpenter by the name of M. S. Powers, fell from the roof of a house in East Des Moines, Iowa, and sustaind a painful and serious sprain of the wrist, which he cured with one bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. He says it is worth $5 a bottle. It cost him 50 cents. For sale by Bristol Bros.

WESTON, June 22, 1890.

Editor Democrat:

Weston is quiet, now that the Methodist revival has closed. Lemonade, ice cream, hot tamales, etc., is all the cry here now.

The farmers are complaining about their crops. They want rain. Cotton is showing out pretty well considering the dry weather.

Weston still has her weather eye on the M. K. & T. R. R. Maybe, the whistle of the locomotive can be heard coming into Weston yet. Who knows?

Rev. Hunter, the Presbyterian minister, preached here at the Methodist church Sunday.

Quite an interesting and entertaining musical concert was given by the young ladies of Weston last Friday evening at Mr. Jack Douglas' residence. All who attended were well pleased.

The harvesters can now be seen cutting and slashing oats, wheat and barley, and the dogs almost splitting their sides yelping and running rabbits Verily, the rabbits are now having a hard time of it.

We learn that Mr. Jas. Sharp who has graced our hamlet so long, is about to leave for Bowie? Wherever you go, success to you, Jim.

Mrs. Caldwell and her daughter, Miss Nannie, are reported quite sick. We hope soon to see them well again.

Mr. Jos. Mulkey, (Uncle Joe) a former resident of Weston, but now of the Indian Territory, is in our hamlet shaking hands with his many friends.

Attention Business Men!

Gentlemen, having secured the use of the DEMOCRAT job department, I am, during vacation, ready to execute some neat job printing. By your patronage you will thus assist me in my efforts to secure an education. I am prepared to print letter, note and bill heads, mortgages, deeds, posters, etc., on short notice. Good work, neatly executed at fair prices.

Very respectfully,
WASH TAYLOR.

By reference to the announcement column it will be seen that Hon. P. B. Muse is a candidate for district Judge of the 15th congressional district Mr. Muse has lived among the people of this district for many, many years and is well known by them, therefore, it would be superfluous for us to give him a lengthy introduction. He is a man well versed in law, an able jurist and well qualified for the position of district judge, and if elected will no doubt serve in that capacity with distinction and ability.

Mr. Van Pelt, editor of the Craig, Mo., Meteor, went to a drug store at Hillsdale, Iowa, and asked the physician in attendance to give him a dose of something for cholera morbus and looseness of the bowels. He says: "I felt so much better the next morning that I concluded to call on the physician and get him to fix me up a supply of the medicine. I was surprised, when he handed me a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. He said he prescribed it regularly in his practice and found it the best he could get or prepare, I can testify to its efficiency in my case at all events." For sale by Bristol Bros.

The citizens of Rowlett community met at the school house last Tuesday night to give expression in regard to the gubernatorial candidates. When the vote was taken for Hogg every one present (25) stood up except one who was asleep. Afterward he was awakened and asked, Who are you in favor of for governor? He rubbed his eyes, gaped and then said, HOGG. So that settled it, and Rowlett went solid for Jim Hogg.

The next meeting of the Collin county Alliance is one of vast importance. Every Alliance in the county should be represented with full delegation. All who have stock in the Alliance exchange trust fund, should be on hand, or represented by proxy. The next meeting will convene at Lone Elm near Wylie, the 3d Wednesday in July.

R. T. QUISENBERRY,
President.

Cholera infantum has lost its terrors since the introduction of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Arlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds and at that time was not able to wark across the street without resting. He found, before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to used it and is to day enjoying good health. If you have any throat lung or chest trouble try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottle free at E. N. McAuley & Bro., druggists.

An alarm of fire was given last Monday which called out the engine, but before it left the engine house many feet, the driver received information that the fire was out. The alarm was caused by the upsetting of a stove vessel in Col. DeArmond's kitchen, which was soon extinguished. The only result was the frightening of the family and a race across the square of about two hundred men and boys.

Infernal Ingenuity

Could scarcely devise more excruciating tortures than those of which you see the evidences in the face of a rheumatic or neuralgic sufferer. The agonies are the consequence of not checking a rheumatic or neuralgic attack at the outset. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has been found by skilful medical practitioners to possess not only remedial, but defensive efficacy, where those diseases exist, or a tendency to them is exhibit'd. Surely this puissant but safe botanic medicine, bearing, too, such high specific sanction, is better than the poisons often employed, but most unsafe, not only in continuance, but in isolated doses. The blood is depurated thoroughly from the rheumatic virus, and the nerves, slightly impurged upon, saved from ultimate and direful throes by this benign, saving medicine, which likewise exhibits marked efficacy for malaria, kidney complaints, dyspepsia, constipation and liver complaint.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. there is only one way to cure Deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is but an inflamed condition of mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Editor Democrat.

In your paper dated June 19, "Uncle Mike" accuses me of being a "mug", running for justice of the peace two years ago, an "anti-Hoggite and anti-commissionite," etc. Now I wish to inform Uncle Mike that I never ran for justice of the peace in my life; am unfortunate enough to be a school teacher. I have been in Texas nearly two years, voted for the first time in the state at the primary convention. I came from Missouri where they raise democrats pure and undefiled. Am also a commission man, and if I go to the convention I will vote for Hogg, as I think at least two-thirds of my constituents are for Hogg and the commission. W. W. HUFF.

How Is This?

Suppose a county officer of high rank call his subjects together, over whom he has jurisdiction, and puts them in convention for the purpose of deciding what course he should pursue in official business to give general satifaction, and that body decide that all should be treated alike, without partiality, and that the officer acts in accordance with the convention until he gets to a mugwump, then he flies the track and rules him out of his professional business—is he complying with his oath? Is he a man? Is he a democrat? Today such a being is in officer in this county, and unless he rights this wrong, the whole thing will come out on him in print. B. B.

The citizens of Willow Springs community met Monday night, June 30, for the purpose of organizing a Jim Hogg club. W. T. Newsome called the house to order and explained the object of the meeting. On motion W. T. Newsome was elected chairman and E. F. England, secretary. The following committee was appointed on resolutions:

J. T. Branch, J. L. Lovelady, J. C. Bowman, J. D. Biggs, E. F. England. By motion the chairman was added to the committee. The following is the report of committee which was unanimously adopted.

To the chairman and members of Willowsprings Jim Hogg club: We, your committee on resolutions respectfully submit the following report.

Resolved That in our opinion the best way to regulate and control railroad corporations is by a railroad commission.

Resolved That we favor J. S. Hogg for governor, believing he will give justice to all classes and special privileges to none.

Resolved That we believe a large majority of the voters of Collin county are in favor of Hogg and the commission and that our uninstructed delegation to the democrat state convention should vote solid for Hogg.

By motion and second ordered secretary to forward a copy of these proceedings to county papers with request to publish the same.

Forty-five members enrolled their names and there are other Hogg men who are out of the vicinity threshing at present who will yet join us.

Mass Meeting at White's Grove.

The citizens of White's Grove met in mass meeting last Thursday night, June 26. 1890, the object of the meeting being to discuss state issues and give expression in regard to the candidates for governor. The meeting was well attended and Hogg proved to be the unanimous choice of the people of that community. The meeting proceeded to organization by electing J. H. Ferguson chairman, and I. T. Bishop secretary.

A committee was appointed on resolutions and submitted the following, which were adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That we endorse the proposed amendment of the constitution, removing all constitutional doubts of a railroad commission.

Resolved, That we request the delegates, appointed by the Collin county convention, uninstructed, to vote for James Hogg for governor, first, last and all the time.

Resolved, That we request every community in Collin county to call a similar meeting and give an expression on state issues.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the McKinney Democrat and Examiner. J. H. FERGUSON, Chairman.

I. T. BISHOP, Sec.

Several speeches were made by citizens, bearing upon state issues, and each speaker strongly advocated Hogg for governor. The meeting was harmonious throughout.

[It is earnestly desired that every other community in the county will call a meeting and do as the citizens of White's Grove have done. Try and send in with the report the number of votes taken for or against Hogg for governor. —Ed]

A jolly crowd from White's Grove, consisting of Jas. Cheek, J. N. Standerfer, Joe Stimson, M. C. McMahan and John Holliman, went fishing last week and spent a couple days catching the finny tribe. They were unusually successful on this occasion, and we are reliably informed they caught at least two hundred and fifty pounds. Their greatest success was near the mouth of Wilson creek. Messrs. Holliman, McMahan and Standerfer caught a large eel and had a tussle with it, and finally yelled to Jim Cheek who went to their aid. They report lots of fun. Jim Cheek, who is capable of creating jokes, slipped up the hill and rolled a bucket down on the other fellows (we suppose it was after night) and it was a picnic to see them scatter. They had a royal good time and carried a large quantity of fish home with them.

[Owensboro (Ky.) Inquirer, May 25.]

A reporter of the Inquirer dropped into the Farmers and Traders Bank yesterday morning and learned from the cashier that the cash had been forwarded for one-twentieth of ticket No. 45,830, which drew the first capital prize of $300,000 in the drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery on the 13th inst.

Being fully assured by the cashier that the $15,000 was actually deposited in the bank, the reporter started out to interview Milton Mays, the owner. "Doubtless you can now tell us something of the feelings of a rich man as well as those of a poor one, Milt," said the reporter.

"No, sir, I have never felt the difference."

"What will you do with the money?"

The Power of Money.

What an influence for good or evil is exerted by the proper or improper use of money. It seems to be the first essential of modern life. Sad indeed is the lot of that man or that woman without money and without friends. Especially in cases of sickness is the need of money felt most pressingly, and yet even the rich with all their money fall into a state of poor health and die, whereas if their money was rightly expended and the proper remedies applied they might regain health and strength.

Z. A. Clark, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I spent four hundred and eighty dollars in gold to cure me of terrible blood poison that effected my limbs and nose and body, with running ulcers. One month's treatment of B B B healed the ulcers, restored my appetite, strengthened my kidneys, and added 21 pounds to weight."

Still, in spite of this and much other testimony there are many who refuse to try the remedy, seeming to prefer to pay large fees to physicians, or visit distant springs in vain hopes of recovery. The great truth however ever shines brightly and that is, that no one who ever gave B B B (Botanic Blood Balm) a trial ever found disappointment therein.

O. H. Rudolph, Palatka, Fla., writes: "had blood disease for six years, but nothing benefitted me although I paid two hundred and fifty dollars for treatment. At last I tried B B B and found it a quick and cheap blood purifier."

The light smile had died away that had been visible when she first spoke, and she was quite grave as she accompanied him in silence for a few minutes. And then, as if shaking off the shadowy anxiety: "What a s n-worshiper you are!" she said. "You are never happy unless he is shining down upon you. Do you feel the cold very much?"

"Very much. I only live in the summer."

"You are not strong," she said, more as if stating a fact than asking a question.

"I am much stronger than I was," he answered, evasively.

She looked up at him quickly, as if to read the truth of his words in his face. But she did not speak. Neither did he, though he did not turn his eyes away, but let them rest on hers.

She hesitated a second, then gave a quick little sigh. But, "It is a pity for a man not to be strong," was all she said.

"It makes their lives more difficult," he answered.

They were standing now on the broad terrace, up and down which peacocks were flaunting, apparently well pleased with the attention they were exciting. Sydney in her white dress and large shady hat, her grave eyes looking steadily over the meadows beneath, far away to where shone the river in the sunlight. Not once did she lift them to the man standing beside her, with fair, uncovered head, his eyes following the direction of hers.

At last: "Let us go down," he said. "Down to the river, I mean. We shall not be able to do it very much oftener."

"And why?" she interrupted, lifting her eyes swiftly.

"Oh, the weather will change—or I shall be gone. Everything comes to an end."

"Everything comes to the end," she repeated softly. "Is that so, I wonder? It is rather a hard world, is it not, when one comes to think that that is the text of it?"

He did not answer.

Down by the river the glory of the sunset was beginning to fade, and a faint gray shadow seemed to haunt the river. The only sign of life was a tall, black-robed woman's figure across the water, wending her homeward way over the fields—dark and distinct against the sky; and a smaller dark figure of a child, that ran about hither and thither searching for flowers, heedless of its mother.

"It is sad," Sydney said, "Somehow, the moment of sunset is always a little suggestive of death—loneliness—sadness. One feels something has been taken out of our life."

"Mademoiselle."

It was no answer to her words, no comment on them that was coming. The tones were a little excited—a certain thrill in them which seemed to presage the coming of something special.

Sydney turned her head with a certain consciousness of the unusualness of his voice, and almost instinctively took a step away from him, shaking off her dreaminess as she did so. But as she so moved, before his next word reached her, there rang through the still summer evening air a shrill, terrified scream, that, before it had time to die away, was caught up and echoed in a woman's agonized tones, and then: "It is the child." Sydney cried. "Oh, see!" pointing to where a small dark head showed on the smooth current. Then she was aware, in a misty, uncertain fashion—for eyes and brain for the moment alike seemed clouded—that the man beside her had moved forward to the edge of the steep bank that formed the border of the river, and that she—was it indeed she?—with hands tight-clasped about his arm, was imploring him to stay. Was it her own voice? "Not you. Oh, do not go!"

She felt the hold of her hands loosened. It seemed to her she felt also a light kiss upon them ere they were released, and then they were hanging down by her side, and she was standing straight and tall on the bank, the sun shining broadly down, and she realized, all in a moment, that she, in her white gown, and that other black-robed figure opposite, were both alike standing, one on either side of the river, waiting and praying for the life that was dearest to them on earth.

But though she felt it she did not move, did not even clasp her hands, could not even think. Past and to come, even the present seemed vague and undefined compared with the golden sunlight that was writing her love in letters of fire across the evening sky and green meadows, even in a faint reflective fashion, on the surface of the flowing river.

He was across now—the little dark-headed child was safe in its mother's arms; the blonde-haired man was holding the mother's hand, and listening doubtless to the words that her love and gratitude prompted.

And now through the sunlight, a little flame of gold all about him, he had turned quickly away toward the bridge, that half a mile off formed the connecting link between Hayes and the village of Morland.

And as he thus turned away, thought and the power of movement seemed to return to her.

Her first instinct was to try and realize what she had said and done in these last few moments; her second, to hasten toward her home and the protecting presence that there awaited her. There was something calming in the thought of the kind old man to whom her advent was never unwelcome.

So, obeying it after that moment's hesitation, she turned homeward, stepping lightly over the short meadow grass. The sun had now very nearly set, and the low-lying fields were growing gray and misty, the reds and yellows slowly fading from the sky, and their fainter reflection from the broad river beneath.

She did not stop until she stood by Mr. Loraine's side; then, having told him the story, and bidden him go and meet Count Lindenheim, she went on to her own room. Only there, in that haven of safety, did she feel able to think, though even in that secure retreat consecutive thought was difficult. Standing by the window, round which the roses clustered, with hands clasped together, she strove to put into words that which was troubling her.

"I was frightened," she said half aloud. "I am more excitable than I thought. Yes, that was it. For the moment, I was really frightened."

But all the time she knew that it had not been that.

She lingered on, some feeling of nervousness prompting her, until her watch told her it was five minutes past the dinner hour, and it required a certain amount of courage to open the door and enter the drawing-room. She was conscious of an unaccustomed color in her cheeks, and of the quickened beats of her heart and it was only a minute later, with a sigh that might have been relief, she realized that her father was its only occupant.

"He is not coming down," Mr. Loraine said, in reply to her inquiring look. "I have persuaded him to go to bed; it is much wiser. Come," taking the girl's hand in his, "you must come down to dinner with me instead."

"Is he ill?" she questioned.

"He was shivering and miserable; it is always better to take care."

"Don't you think he looks very delicate?" she asked when they sat down—they two alone together as they had done so often; and yet to-night the room seemed strangely empty without him.

"Yes, I should say he was. And he should be careful, for his mother died of consumption. From what he tells me, he has been very ill himself. And under the circumstances, a plunge into a cold river at sunset, and a long walk afterward in wet clothes, is not likely to do him any good. So I ordered what I thought was best."

Sydney did not immediately reply. She clasped her hands tightly together, with a momentary pain at her heart, and then: "It was very wise and thoughtful, father," she said. "It is always better to take too much care than too little."

Dinner over, she returned at once upstairs. She felt restless and ill at ease; and leaving her father in the library, where she had seen him established at his writing-table, she opened the door of communication, and, passing through, entered the drawing-room. It seemed to her that in this long, empty apartment, with no one to speak to her or watch her, she could bring herself back to calm.

The only light fell from a shaded lamp at the further end of the room, in the corner where stood the piano, but having closed the door behind her, she became immediately aware that she was not alone, as she had expected to be—that a man's figure stood by the open window, looking down on to the dusky garden.

"Count Lindenheim!" she spoke very low, but he heard her, and turned his head at once.

"You are here," he said quickly. "I wait for you. I wish much to speak to you."

"But it is very foolish;" her voice was still soft and low, and she moved a few steps nearer to him; "and you are standing by the open window. How unwise! Come away, please."

She went on into the corner by the piano, and seating herself at it, pointed to a low chair beside her.

"Sit down," she said, in tones more like her usual voice, "then you cannot deceive me. I can judge for myself how foolish you are."

"No, I do not wish to deceive you," he answered. "I have caught cold, I am certain, but that we can speak of afterward. First, there is something else. I wished to say it to you this afternoon, and then——"

"Yes," she said softly, "tell me now." She was no longer excited. The hands that held the peacock's feathers did not tremble, only her eyes did not meet his.

"I," he began. He stopped abruptly, then rose up and took a few steps and back again, until he stood behind her chair, and there again paused, and rested his hands on the back, as if to steady himself. "I don't know why I have not told you before," he began; "It has not been from any wish to keep it to myself, but—I am engaged."

The empty room seemed to echo the words, hold them, and repeat them for full a moment's breathless silence. A moment, whilst the hold on her fan loosened, and she clasped her hands tightly together, and then she spoke. All the softness had gone out of her gray eyes, her voice even had grown hard and defiant.

"And why should you tell me now? A man is not called upon to confess his private affairs unless he is inclined."

"You ask—but you know. Look at me, and tell me it is so."

Almost involuntarily she turned her head, and looked up at him; but having done so steadily, her eyes wavered a little from those above her. "You must go," then she said abruptly, but still not lifting her eyes to his. It was never a fault of Sydney Loraine's to avoid a difficulty; it was almost impossible for her to ignore it, even when perhaps more worldly wisdom would have been displayed in skirting it by. "You have been here long enough. You must return"—there was a second's pause—"to the woman you love."

"Ah, but," the words came quickly and passionately, "the woman I love is here!"

"You will not think so when you are at home again; you will soon forget. A fortnight," bitterly, "is not much out of a man's life."

"If you think that—do you?—yes," as she did not speak, "why should you not? —then there seems nothing more to say."

He took his hands off the back of her chair, and moved away to the window, where he had been standing when she entered, and there threw himself down into a chair, covering his face with his hands.

She watched him, still in silence, and noted, as the dim uncertain twilight fell upon him, how ill and haggard he looked, noted also how thin the hands were in which he had hidden his face.

"I do not think it," she cried, quickly and impetuously, following him and standing by his side; "I am cruel." Then, as he still did not move, of a sudden she knelt down by his side in soft abandonment, and laid her hand on his arm. "I am cruel," she repeated, "but it is because I am hurt myself, and," her voice faltering, "you know it, you know it."

At the touch on his arm, at the sound of the soft voice, from which had died out alike the hardness and the defiance, Count Lindenheim lifted his bent head, and then laid his hand caressingly on the one which lay upon his coat-sleeve.

"Ah," she cried, anxiously, "how feverish you are!—your hands are burning. Father said you were ill. How wrong of you not to take more care!"

"You are good to care," he answered. His words seemed to recall her to herself. She rose to her feet, standing beside him tall and slender.

"I care a great deal," she said gravely, "so much that I will not listen to the story to-night, but will wait to hear it until you are quite strong and rested after a night's sleep. But," swiftly, "you will tell me to-morrow?"

"I will tell you now," he answered, rising also. "Give me your hand. Do you believe that it was from no wish to hide anything that I did not tell you before?"

She did not answer in words, but neither did she take her hand from his.

"This afternoon," he went on, "I made up my mind to go, and then——" He hesitated. "I thought at first I need say nothing—that I would go, and that I was the only one who need suffer."

"But this afternoon," she interposed, "you thought that I should suffer too—is it not so?—and therefore you made up your mind to tell me. It was better, kinder," she added slowly, clasping both hands about his. "It is foolish, wrong perhaps, to say so, but do not reproach yourself; I never shall. Even if you go, and I never see you again, I shall remember how happy I have been. I did not understand it before, but now I do. I understood it. I think, this afternoon, and now"—the steady voice faltered—"now I have only to learn how to live without you."

He turned away, drawing his hands from hers, and sat down again, his eyes turned toward the dark, silent garden.

"I can say nothing"—and his voice sounded hoarse and difficult; "but if I regain my freedom, may I come back?"

She clasped and unclasped her hands, as if she were in pain, and it was a moment before she spoke.

"Perhaps it would be better not to think of it," she answered. "It has been a mistake. There will be difficulties and pain anyway. It will, I dare say, come right for you——" And then, breaking off, and her tones growing quick and passionate, "I cannot say it, I cannot," coming a step nearer to him, and laying her hand on his shoulder. "Oh, Esme, I cannot live without you! Do not leave me. I love you, I love you!"

At the sound of the passionate words he half turned, holding out his arms, but, recovering herself, Sydney stepped back.

Hindoo English.

Some of the natives of India speak a very bizarre English. One man during an examination was told to write an essay upon the horse, which he did in the following brief item: "The horse is a very noble animal, but when irritated he ceases to do so." Another had to write upon the difference between riches and poverty, and he ended by saying: "In short, the rich man wellers on crimson velvet, while the poor man snorts on flint." From Judge Cunningham, a well-known Anglo-Indian, came the following story in illustration of Indian politeness: "A judge, who was a very bad shot, had been out for a day's sport, and on his return the man who went with him was asked, 'Well, how did the judge shoot to-day?' 'Oh,' he replied, 'the judge shoot beautifully, but heaven was very merciful to the birds.'"

Seattle.

Seattle was founded thirty-eight years ago by some thirty or forty men, who went there in the schooner Exact, which had been chartered by a party of California miners to go to Alaska. These young men were landed at Alki point, and went to the site of Seattle, which was then an Indian settlement and mainly a dense forest.

THE FARM AND HOME.

An Hour's Talk with Industrious Farmers and Housewives.

Description of Cheap and Easily Made Incubators--Some Good Advice About Special Farming -- Dairy Notes -- Horticultural Hints--Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Incubators and Brooders.

There are several plans for incubators, requiring more or less attention according to their arrangement. A simple and cheap one consists of a box or portable closet, the door fitted with a large pane of glass. Cleats nailed to the sides of the closet, support the sliding shelf, and strips of wood fastened to the shelf on the four sides, prevent the eggs from falling out when it is pulled forward daily in order to turn the eggs, and occasionally to moisten them. The closet should be raised to a convenient height and firmly fastened, so that the drawing out of the shelf will cause but slight motion to the eggs.

Several modes of supplying heat to incubators have been invented, one consisting of a coal oil lamp placed at one end of the closet on the outside, having a vessel of water over it. A piece of lead pipe soldered at both ends into separate parts of this vessel, is made to pass around the inside of the closet. The lighted lamp causes the water to boil, the steam passing through the pipe, warms the eggs, and returns to the outside vessel.

A thermometer hung inside the closet indicates temperature, which is regulated by the flame of the lamp. The water in the vessel must not be allowed to get too low and the water added should be hot.

Another plan for heating incubators, is to have the top consist of a tin vessel; having an orifice about three inches in diameter in one end of it. Into this orifice a tin pipe six inches long is tightly soldered, at an angle of forty five degrees. The vessel should of course be covered and the pipe closed at the lower end, with a piece of the same metal. Vessel and pipe being filled with hot water, a lighted lamp placed under the closed end of the pipe, soon causes the water to rise through it, producing a circulation, thereby increasing the temperature of the vessel, which gives sufficient heat to the incubator, and the eggs placed upon the shelf within it.

BROODERS—Several years ago, before artificial brooders were thought of, I was, while living in the west, compelled to protect a hatching of motherless chicks, and contrived a brooder from a large pasteboard box about two and a half feet long, two feet wide and sufficiently deep to prevent the young chicks from getting out. I cut the cover crosswise one half the length of the box, one end of which I lowered to the depth of three inches, and sloped the sides to correspond to the size of cover. Onto the inner side of the cover I fastened a piece of sheepskin, previously sewing a few locks of the wool to hang down, especially along the front edge. When finished, I stitched the cover fast to the lower end of the box and the sloping sides.

The chicks were fed in the box, the bottom of which was partially covered with sand: They thrived well, and upon imitating the warning note of the hen, the cunning little things would run under the cover as naturally as when called by the mother. They were soon taught to pick up the grains of softened corn meal, by tapping with the finger nail upon the bottom of the box.

Special Farming no Panacea.

There is much discussion at the present time in regard to how farmers can improve their condition. The most diverse opinions are given on this matter; but the prevailing one is that the farmer should choose some specialty; cultivate it, excel in it, and find the best market for his product. This is a very attractive illusion, but it is one of the most impracticable devices that is possible. Specialists are born or reared under special circumstances which give a turn or bent to their course of life. A man's earliest experiences most often control the direction of his mature life. Accidents turn men out of their chosen courses and force them into others greatly diverse. Not in as many as one case out of ten are the hopes and intentions of young men fulfilled after maturity. Study the history of all the prominent farmers, and we shall not find one in a hundred of them following the course he chose at the beginning of his career. And of the great majority of farmers who have taken up some special branch of agriculture most successfully, nearly all were led or forced by accident to take it up and stick to it. Success came too from a natural fitness for the work. Men have a call, so to speak, for their special work, and very few choose it for themselves. And, thus, specialties in any business cannot be chosen, but are drifted into, and by force of a natural attraction, aided by the current of circumstances, the man and the work meet and become firmly attached together. And this natural attraction or fitness is the secret of success.

So that a farmer who is not satisfied with his work can scarcely hope to succeed in any other special branch by abruptly breaking loose from it and taking up another. It is this restless spirit which creates discontent, weakens effort, and leads to abrupt changes which are so often ruinous.

Dairy Notes.

Never air the milk cellar after 7 in the morning. Ventilation should be given at night, when the air is coolest and dryest, having deposited its moisture in the form of dew.

Salt should be given to the cows every second day. It is needed more now, when the animals are on fresh pasture than at any other time, as an aid to digestion and a preventative of fermentation.

Warm air absorbs a much larger quantity of water than cool air. It may feel cool when it is moving in a current, and feeling of coolness is due to the evaporation of water from the skin, which the warm air takes up. But the air is not any cooler.

Why do cows require salt? Simply because the acid of the salt (the hydrochloric) is largely contained in the saliva and the gastric fluid, by which the food is digested. And a cow secretes and uses up a very large quantity of these fluids in the acts of rumination and digestion.

If the milk ever molds in the pans it indicates that the air is too damp. The milk house or cellar may be dried by keeping a peck of lime in a shallow box in the cellar. A peck of fresh lime will absorb 4 quarts of moisture from the air and is then air slacked.

Horticultural Hints.

For a fast growing vine, beautiful at all times, there is room always, for the Akebia quinata. Its small, plum colored, sweet scented flowers appear with the first leaves in the early Spring.

Do not be sparing with manure for small fruits. Currants, gooseberries, raspberries and blackberries, are only satisfactory when they make heavy growth as this insures plenty of large sized fruit.

A great deal of fun has been made of those that pushed the moonflower into prominence a few years ago. But it is an excellent vine where quick growth is required; and many another old flower would be the better for a lift such as this got.

Some flower beds are capable of carrying three crops of flowering plants in a season. Hyacinths are planted in October, and they are over in time for pansies, and those begin to decline in beauty when it is time to set out coleus and other leaf plants.

It has been said that the Japan chestnuts which have fruited in this country have smaller fruit than many of the Spanish. Without knowing how this may be, it is certainly a fact that the nuts imported direct from Japan are much larger than the Spanish, but the question is are they selected?

Hints to Housekeepers.

Jewelry can be beautifully cleaned by washing in soap suds, in which a few drops of spirits of ammonia are stirred, shaking off the water and laying in a box of dry sawdust. This method leaves no marks or scratches.

To mend a very large hole in socks or woven underwear, tack a piece of strong net over the aperature and darn over it. Thus mended the garment will be stronger than when new, and look far neater than when darned in the ordinary way.

There is nothing so good for chopping potatoes when warming them over as a tin biscuit cutter. If you have a deep one, all right; if not a tin mustard or spice box, by making two or three holes in the top, or bottom rather, answers every purpose.

Gloves should never be rolled into a wad or left lying inside out. Pull off slowly and stretch each finger its full length. Mend every minute rip with glove thread and needles which come especially for the purpose. Wrap each pair in tissue paper, and keep in a long box, without folding.

In families where there are small children it is not enough to have vials containing poisons labelled distinctly. They ought always to be kept in a different place from other liquids, and if possible in a bottle especially shaped, with exterior roughnesses, so that even in the dark the dangerous character of the contents may be recognized.

After carpets are relaid go over them and wipe with a damp cloth wrung out of warm water, to which ox-gall or ox-gall soap has been added. If this cannot be obtained use spirits of turpentine in the proportion of two tablespoonsful to a gallon of water. Ammonia should not be used, as it is sometimes injurious to delicate colors.

Fruit, wine, mildew or ink stains on delicate fabrics can be dipped in clear cold water, and then in a mixture made by one tablespoonful lemon juice, one teaspoonful oxalic acid and one-half pint rain-water, shaken together. Grease spots can usually be taken out by covering the spot with French chalk scraped on, covered with brown paper, and a large flatiron set on it to cool.

Women who wish to preserve the beauty and contour of their figure must begin by learning to stand well, says an authority on the subject. That is explained to mean the throwing forward and upward the chest, the flattening of the back, with the shoulder blades held in their proper places, and the definite curving in the small of the back, thus throwing the whole weight of the body upon the hips.

If a room is to be repainted, use soap powder or ammonia for cleaning the paint. Make three or four bags of strong cotton cloth, just long enough to slip easily over the splints of a ceiling broom, and have a shirr in the top by which to gather them up and tie around the broom handle. Soiled wall paper can be improved somewhat by rubbing carefully, in short strokes, with a soft old flannel cloth dipped in oatmeal.

The Last of the Light Brigade.

The charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, when out of 675 horsemen only 195 returned to form again in line, as told in Tennyson's splendid verse, was indeed a magnificent exhibition of English valor, but the sequel shows that England makes a wide distinction between the hero and heroism. The survivors of that fatal blunder are now reduced to beggary, and to the shame of the English government they are are appealing to private charity for support. Of the more than twenty now living only two have been able to gain admittance to the government hospital at Chelsea, while at least four are in English work houses. The remainder are eking out a miserable existence. When Lord Cardigan gave the order to charge the Russians—

Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die—

not on the battlefield alone, but in English poor houses.

Carlisle's Poverty.

"Do you know the real reason Mr. Carlisle didn't give the boys a banquet the night after his nomination?" a legislator asked recently. "Well, he couldn't afford it. I was told by one of his friends, and in a way that convinces me of its truth, that when he reached Frankfort after the Beck funeral he had just 15 cents in his pocket and that he didn't have a cent more during his stay there. The expenses of his 'headquarters' and for incidentals were borne by his friends from Covington and his lack of funds was not an accident, but because he is just that poor, besides the fact that he has been an honest congressman and amassed no wealth. Like other great minds he has no earthly idea of financiering and spends his salary as fast as it is due."

Friendship.

Friendship is one of those subjects on which much has been written. A great deal more is written than is understood about this topic.

Perhaps Dante's definition of friendship is the shortest and best one of all. He was asked by the Prince Corona how the fact was to be accounted for that in the household of princes the court fool was in greater favor than the philosopher.

"Similarity of mind is the cause of friendship the world over," was the fierce reply of Dante, thereby incurring the eternal enmity of the prince.

There are many causes that separate friends. One of the chasms that part friends is sarcasm. Another is borrowing money. Make friends with your creditors if you can, but never make a creditor of your friend. Some people look for perfection in a friend. They are doomed to disappointment. Whoever looks for a friend without imperfections will never find what he seeks.

Josh Billings definition of a good friend is good. It reads as follows:

"A true friend iz one whom yu kan chide for hiz faults without giving offense, and who without giving offense kan chide yu."

If About to Travel or Emigrate,

The voyager cannot be provided with a safer remedy and protective medicine than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Abundant testimony exist to prove that it nullifies hurtful climatic influences and the effects of exposure, that it reconciles the stomach to unaccustomed food, and prevents injurious results from impure water. Mariners, tourists, emigrants and miners have all contributed their quota of testimony in its behalf, and its protective influence has been most effectually demonstrated in regions and under conditions where, if not really effective, that fact would long since have been exposed. In no class of disorders have its remedial and preventive properties been more conspicuously shown than in cases of malaria, fevers, maladies for which it is the most popular specific in existence, both here and in the tropics, where its reputation is scarcely second to that which it enjoys on this continent. It is, moreover, a most agreeable appetizer and nervine.

Confirmed.

The favorable impression produced on the first appearance of the agreeable liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs a few years ago has been more than confirmed by the pleasant experience of all who have used it, and the success of the proprietors and manufacturers the California Fig Syrup Company.

Intelligent People.

When an intelligent person makes up his mind to try Smith's Tonic Syrup, made by Dr. John Bull of Louisville, Ky., he will not be persuaded by his druggist to take some other remedy. He will insist on his druggist getting the medicine he wants, even though he may have to wait a week for it. When a family has once used Smith's Tonic Syrup and experienced its quick effect in curing all symptoms of malaria, chills and fever, summer colds, etc., they never allow themselves to be without it. An intelligent father would as soon be without flour in the house as to be without Smith's Tonic Syrup. The children like it, and its effect is always satisfactory.

"IT HAS BEEN A BLESSING TO ME,"

Is the manner in which Mrs. M. A. Peeler, an estimable lady of Morgantown, N. C., expresses her appreciation of Swift's Specific. The following is an extract from her letter:

Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) has been a blessing to me. Afflicted with rheumatism and female weakness for a number of years, during which time I took a great deal of medicine, nothing giving me relief but Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) What I suffered and endured before commencing on Swift's Specific (S. S.
